

THE INAUGURATION OF
THOMAS H. KEAN
AS
TENTH PRESIDENT OF DREW UNIVERSITY

FRIDAY, THE TWENTIETH OF APRIL
NINETEEN HUNDRED AND NINETY
TWO O'CLOCK IN THE AFTERNOON ON THE CAMPUS
MADISON, NEW JERSEY

Built by renowned scholars, supported by people of vision, nurtured by dedicated leaders, and located on a beautiful tract of land long known as The Forest, Drew University is uniquely poised in its history to become a national leader in higher education, for in recent decades Drew has made innovation and distinction the watchwords of its identity.

Drew's innovative streak may stem from its birthright. Founded in 1866 as a seminary for the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, the school was endowed by Daniel Drew with what was at the time the largest gift to American higher education. The financier, whose early cattle dealings gave birth to the original meaning of "watered stock," managed the school's endowment through stock manipulations and speculation until in 1875 his practices nearly bankrupted the young seminary. That crisis necessitated administrative resourcefulness and faculty sacrifice to keep the school open.

However uncertain its beginnings, Drew has since grown into a university whose programs--from the Bachelor of Arts to the Master of Divinity to the Doctor of Philosophy--are distinguished by an emphasis on intimate learning and teaching. Drew's three schools--the College of Liberal Arts (1,500 students), the Graduate School (350), and the Theological School (350)--share an insistence on academic rigor and a student-centered philosophy that has educated nearly 14,000 living alumni and alumnae.

Drew's financial health is strong as well, with an $80 million endowment--managed far more carefully than by its founder--ranked among the top 100 universities in the United States for endowment per student.

These strengths have made innovation and distinction possible. In 1961 Drew's College of Liberal Arts established a special semester in London and followed with the United Nations Semester, both among the very first of their kind; the university now operates a total of eight off-campus programs in London, Brussels, New York, Washington, D.C., and Santiago, Chile. Then in 1975 the school became one of the first to offer freshman seminars, a novel way of refocusing on excellent teaching while guaranteeing that senior faculty teach new college students. Six years later brought eminent retired research scientists together with undergraduates in the Charles A. Dana Research Institute for Scientists Emeriti (RISE).

Drew added merit scholarships for high-achieving students in 1982, two years after Phi Beta Kappa awarded Drew only its third chapter in New Jersey and the first among small schools in the state. In 1984 came the Governor's School in the Sciences, an innovation of then-governor Thomas H. Kean. Each summer the four-week school brings 100 of the state's brightest high school seniors to campus for enrichment in the sciences.

The university integrated computer technology into teaching and learning in 1984, when, through its Computer Initiative, Drew became the first comprehensive liberal arts institution to supply every entering undergraduate with a personal computer. The school extended the reach of technology in 1988 with the Knowledge Initiative, a voice-data network that linked all students, faculty, and staff via their computers to each other, the library's card catalog, special databases, and international networks--again first among liberal arts schools.

Other firsts include an arrangement that in 1988 created the U.S. Field Hockey Center at Drew through cooperation with the national sanctioning bodies for men's and women's field hockey and the U.S. Olympic Foundation. The center, with its German-trade Poligras surface and aggregate base, represents the first full-scale installation of this revolutionary playing field system in the United States.

These innovations principally serve Drew's College of Liberal Arts, founded as Brothers College in 1928 through the generosity of New Jerseyans Leonard and Arthur Baldwin. The College offers majors in 26 disciplines, minors in 33, and the third-largest collegiate library in New Jersey. Drew undergraduates, 50 percent of whom rank in the top 10 percent of their high school classes, hail from 40 states and 25 foreign countries. With a median high school class rank of 90 percent, Drew students are among the strongest in the nation.

Innovation and distinction, moreover, are not limited to the College. The Graduate School offers an unusual interdisciplinary Ph.D. program in 19th-century studies and is one of the few graduate schools in the nation with a doctoral offering in Protestant liturgical studies. A special semester on the history of science takes students to London, while the Master of Letters program, which studies the foundations of Western intellectual thought, is self-consciously interdisciplinary. Throughout its nearly century-long tradition of graduate education and certainly since the Graduate School's formal creation in 1955, the Drew Graduate School has emphasized interdisciplinary study in its nine degree programs.

The founding spirit still reigns in the Theological School, the only seminary created by Methodism's General Conference, its central governing body. From the beginning the school has attracted scholars of national and international stature and, along with the Graduate School, has enjoyed international reputé through most of its history. To traditional degrees awarded in religious education and preparation for the ministry, the Theological School added in the 1970's a Doctor of Ministry program for experienced pastors. Now on the verge of the 21st century, the seminary is carefully building an inclusive faculty and curriculum. As it strives to welcome multicultural, multiracial, and gender-inclusive perspectives, the Theological School proudly proclaims its historic association with the United Methodist Church.

The beauty of the campus, the commitment to intimate learning, the vigor of free inquiry, the depth of religious and humane values, the eager anticipation of the Drew community, the vision of distinction--these strengths greet President Thomas H. Kean upon his inauguration.

THOMAS H. KEAN

Teaching is the only job I have ever had that can compare to being governor of a great state," wrote then-New Jersey Governor Thomas H. Kean in his book, The Politics of Inclusion (1988).

Not surprisingly, education became a hallmark of his political career, from his beginning in the New Jersey Assembly in 1968 through his two terms as New Jersey's 48th governor (1982-1990). While Speaker of the Assembly (1972-74), Mr. Kean wrote the bill that established the Educational Opportunity Fund for disadvantaged students wishing to attend college, and he shepherded it into law.

Under his gubernatorial leadership, New Jersey became the first state to adopt alternative routes to teacher certification and the first to take over urban school districts that repeatedly fail to educate students. Governor Kean also raised teacher salaries and educational standards through testing junior high and high school students. And to enhance the education of the state's brightest high school seniors, he founded college-based summer programs, known as Governor's Schools, in the arts, the sciences, public service, and the environment.

New Jersey's colleges and universities have also benefited from his educational emphasis. The governor signed into law legislation granting autonomy to state colleges and won funding for major challenge grants so public and private colleges could create programs of distinction and vision. Mr. Kean spearheaded over three dozen major educational reforms, coupled with a financial commitment that saw New Jersey rise to first in the nation in per pupil spending for education. His vision inspired other leaders to designate him as the nation's "education governor."

The Kean administration also forged major initiatives in economic development, high technology incentives, environmental protection, toxic waste control, tax reduction, and welfare reform. Governor Kean was elected to his second term with the largest landslide in New Jersey history, in the process carrying 60 percent of African-American voters and more than two-thirds of union households. Constitutionally barred from a third term, he returns to education as the 10th president of Drew University. He has said his new job will allow him "to reconnect with the younger generation."

Born April 21, 1935, Thomas Howard Kean was fifth of six children of Elizabeth (Sluyvesant) Kean and of Robert Winthrop Kean, who for 20 years represented New Jersey in the United States House of Representatives. Drew's new president belongs to one of America's foremost political families. His relatives include governors in three different colonies, a member of the Continental Congress, the first constitutional governor of New Jersey, and two United States senators.

Education was never something he took for granted. Shy as a child, Mr. Kean was troubled by several learning disabilities. Crediting dedicated teachers with making him a better student, he went on to earn a B.A. in history from Princeton University in 1957. Afterwards, he served in the Army National Guard, directed a summer camp in New Hampshire for economically disadvantaged children, worked on Wall Street, ran a small business, and taught high school.

He earned an M.A. in history at Columbia University in 1963 and during that time was active in the civil-rights movement. He later taught political science part-time at Rutgers University.

Mr. Kean serves on President Rush's Education Advisory Committee and is on the boards of the World Wildlife Fund and Conservation Foundation and the National Center for Education and the Economy. In March, at the request of the President, he headed the United States' delegation to the United Nations World Conference on Education in Jontiem, Thailand.

He and his wife, Deborah Elizabeth (Bye) Kean, originally of Wilmington, Delaware, are the parents of twin sons, Thomas Jr. and Reed, and a daughter, Alexandra. The Kean family resides in nearby Livingston.

LAMAR ALEXANDER

Like Thomas H. Kean, Lamar Alexander has served as the governor of a great state. Like Governor Kean, he too made education a priority and went on to become the president of a university. And like his colleague on the dais, Lamar Alexander is one of his state's best-known figures.

Raised in Marysville, Tennessee, in the foothills of the Smoky Mountains, Mr. Alexander is the son of parents who were teachers. He graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Vanderbilt University and from New York University Law School. A Republican in a heavily Democratic state, he ran unsuccessfully for the governor's post in 1974 but returned in 1978 to win election and eventually became the first Tennessee governor to serve eight consecutive years, 1979-1987.

His administration was known for its Better Schools program, a package of educational reforms; for Homecoming '86, a series of 798 community celebrations across the state; and for his ability to attract large industrial investments such as new auto plants.

During his tenure Mr. Alexander chaired the National Governors' Association (1985-86), leading that group's education survey, Time for Results. For his "distinguished national leadership in education," he received the James B. Conant Award in 1988 from the Education Commission of the States. An avid hiker, he also headed President Reagan's Commission on the Outdoors and in 1987 received one of six National Collegiate Athletic Association Silver Anniversary Awards for eminent former student-athletes.

After leaving office, Mr. Alexander and his family spent six months in Australia. Out of that visit came Six Months Off: An American Family's Australian Adventure. He has written three other books as well: Steps Along the Way: A Governor's Scrapbook, and, with photographer Robin Hood, The Tennesseans: A People and Their Land and Friends.

Now in his second year as the president of the University of Tennessee, he also serves on President Bush's Education Policy Advisory Committee, the new Knight Commission on Intercollegiate Athletics, the National Academy of Science's Advisory Board for Issues in Science and Technology, and the Commission on U.S.-Japan Relations.

His interest in family matters and their relation to education is apparent in Corporate Child Care, Inc., which Mr. Alexander, his wife, Honey, and Bob Keeshan, television's Captain Kangaroo, founded to help companies solve their employees' child-care problems.

ACADEMIC REGALIA

One of the most colorful traditions in modern university life, the wearing of academic regalia had its origins in the medieval universities of Europe. There it distinguished academic persons such as doctors, licentiates, masters, and bachelors from other segments of the people. Unheated buildings probably necessitated wearing the heavy, woolen gowns. Hoods then covered monk-scholars' heads, eventually giving way to skull-caps, and, finally, to today's academic caps or mortar-boards.

American colleges and universities adopted the custom but without the strict standards of the Europeans. Not until 1895 did representatives of American schools codify standards of academic dress with the establishment of The Intercollegiate Dress Code. That code was amended in 1902, 1932, and 1959. Today, The Academic Costume Code of the American Council on Education prescribes color, shape, and texture of the academic costume.

The standards require long, pointed sleeves for the plain gown of bachelor's degree recipients; long, oblong or square-cut sleeves (often with trailing "elbows") for master's degree recipients, and closed, bell-shaped sleeves for doctoral degree recipients. Bachelor's degree gowns are worn closed, while master's and doctoral degree gowns may be worn open or closed.

Hoods, worn across the throat and over the shoulders, reflect the official colors of the school granting the degree, with the length of the hood running from three feet for the bachelor's degree to four feet for the doctoral degree. The color of velvet represents the wearer's field of learning and can generally be glimpsed near the wearer's throat, while the school colors are contained in the lining at the back of the hood.

The cap's -- or mortar board's -- tassel may either be black or reflect the scholarly subject, although only doctoral recipients may have gold thread. The Academic Costume Code specifies the following discipline/color relationships: art, letters, humanities: white; dentistry, lilac; economics, copper; education, light blue; law, purple; library science, lemon; medicine, green; music, pink; philosophy, dark blue; physical education, sage green; science, golden yellow; social work, citron; theology or divinity, scarlet; business administration, sapphire blue.

T H E U N I V E R S I T Y S E A L .

The university seal was created to celebrate the institution's new status in 1928 when the Drew Theological Seminary of the Methodist Episcopal Church added Brothers College (now the College of Liberal Arts) and changed its name to Drew University. This 1928 seal replaced an earlier one on which the words "Drew Theological Seminary 1866" encircled a bust of the school's founder, Daniel Drew. According to the minutes of trustee meetings, design and adoption of the new seal required only two months. The seal's designers, directed by President Ezra Squier Tipple, bequeathed no explanation of its symbolism, but the tree in the center surely represents Drew's mighty oaks and The Forest, so named from before the Revolutionary War. The placement of the cross, probably the Bible, on the tree suggests the Tree of Life or the Tree of Knowledge, both apt associations. The Greek inscription from the New Testament, Matthew 10:8, is the university motto: "Freely have you received, freely give." The reference to 1868 can be confusing. Although the university dates its founding from 1866 and the beginning of instruction, Drew was not officially incorporated until 1868. From the seal's adoption until 1961, it was Drew's most prominent emblem. Although the trustees designated the shield as the university's symbol after 1961, the seal is still used on all official documents requiring it, including all diplomas.

T H E U N I V E R S I T Y S H I E L D

Adapted from those of Oxford University and two of its colleges, Lincoln and Christ Church, the Drew University shield reflects the formal education of Methodism's founder John Wesley. The noted 18th-century churchman was a fellow at Lincoln, an undergraduate at Christ Church, and a recipient of the master of arts degree from Oxford. In the Oxford coat of arms, top left, the crowns represent faith, hope and love. The motto "the Lord is my light" appears on a hook with seven seals, a reference to Revelation 5:1 and Isaiah 29:11-12. The Lincoln College coat of arms, top right, is proportioned into three panels: the arms of Bishop Fleming, the arms of the resident Bishop of Lincoln College, and the arms of Bishop Rotherham. The bottom crest, that of Christ Church, is the coat of arms of its founder, Cardinal Thomas Wolsey. The rose at the top is emblematic of the House of Lancaster. The birds are Cornish choughs (crow family), the heraldic use of which was granted to Wolsey by Henry VIII. The lion represents Pope Leo X.

T H E U N I V E R S I T Y M A C E S

In medieval times a mace was a heavy staff or club used as a weapon. This use gave way in time to a symbol of authority of office, carried before officials on ceremonial occasions. The university's simple wooden maces, which had been carried at commencements and in other convocations where faculty formally gathered, were lost in August 1989 in the fire which destroyed much of Mead Hall and its contents. Today, 12 new maces -- a grand mace, a platform mace, and 10 marshals' sceptres -- take their place in Drew history. Carved and fashioned out of cherry wood by Trades Supervisor Ronald E. Melcher, each of the maces holds much Drew symbolism. On the marshals' maces, the club-like handle yields to four petals of oak leaves, representing faculty, atop which sits an acorn, symbolizing the student. On each mace are three facets bearing Drew shields, representing the three Drew schools. The major maces -- one to lead the academic procession, one to lead the President's Party -- are more elaborate, each sporting six shields. In addition, each has seven turnings, one for each of the original liberal arts -- grammar, logic, rhetoric, arithmetic, astronomy, geometry and music -- marked by a pewter ring with the initial of the discipline. Mr. Melcher, who does woodworking as a hobby, has stained each of the maces a dark brown.

T H E T O W E R B E L L S

The Tower Bells which will peal for 90 seconds at the conclusion of today's service were made in 1927 by Meneely Bell Company of Troy, New York, and installed in the same year in the new Brothers College tower. There they rang the Westminster chime for generations of Drew students until they stopped working more than a decade ago. Today, the Senior Class Gift of the College Class of 1984 is realized with the 24-change, manual ringing of the repaired bells. Each of the four bells is bronze, with the largest weighing some 560 pounds. They range in size from 23-inches to 60-inches. When the repairs -- installation of a computerized solenoid which activates the clapper, plus replacements for all connections, cables, and springs -- are completed this summer and the clock is replaced with quartz inner workings, this Drew tradition and landmark will again mark the passing of time with the Westminster chime on the hour and half hour from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. on weekdays. The bronze sentries will remain silent on weekends.

THE SYMBOLS OF INAUGURATION

THE PRESIDENTIAL MEDALLION

Struck expressly for the Kean Inauguration and hung from an Oxford blue ribbon, the medallion carries on its obverse the university's official seal (see Symbols of the University) and on its reverse the president's name and today's date. Worn on ceremonial occasions, it signifies the official authority of the university.

THE BIBLE AND JOHN WESLEY'S SUNDAY SERVICE

The leather-bound Oxford University edition of the New English Bible is a reminder of Drew's religious heritage and its continuing commitment to Judeo-Christian values and ecumenical community. John Wesley's Sunday Service is offered by the campus-based United Methodist General Commission on Archives and History, which houses two of the six volumes of the service remaining from those Wesley sent in 1784 to American Methodists seeking guidance in worship. Along with the books came two ordained ministers and an ordained Anglican bishop, who used them to ordain pastors and thus start the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. The editor of the most recent edition of the Sunday Service, James W. White of the University of Notre Dame, donated this personal facsimile copy for today's ceremony. Because Wesley only modestly revised The Book of Common Prayer, this gift represents the common heritage of Drew's first non-Methodist president and its founding church.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAP AND GOWN

Created for this event, the presidential cap and gown were designed by Pfeiffer Professor of Religion James H. Pain, Professor of Church History and Methodist Librarian Kenneth Rowe, and by Ede and Ravenscroft Limited, robemakers to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II of England and the Duke of Edinburgh. The gown is one of office, not degree, and although adapted from the usage of several British universities, it remains more akin to ones worn by a lord mayor or a chancellor of Oxford. The colors are Drew's, Oxford blue and Lincoln green, with a trim of 22-carat gold lace drawn with acorns and oak leaves, long emblems of Drew's campus. Gold lace also edges the skull cap of the mortarboard.

THE SEAL OF THE UNIVERSITY

The seal of the office, not to be confused with the university seal, is a brass press forged with two concentric circles surrounding the president's initials. For use on official documents and proclamations, it symbolizes the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the president's office.

THE TREE

During the ceremony the president will receive a 21-inch by 20-inch framed print of a white oak, a gift emblematic of the tree to be planted near Mead Hall in his name. An engraved plate on the framed print reads, "Presented to Thomas H. Kean from the Alumni Associations of Drew University on the Occasion of His Inauguration--April 20, 1990." Majestic trees have always been central to Drew tradition. The campus encompasses a stand of primeval forest in the Drew Forest Preserve, two landmark trees listed among the oldest in the Borough of Madison, and the Hardin Oak, estimated at nearly 400 years of age, which honors Drew's immediate past president. The oak embodies the seeds of enlightenment that a university sows, the collegiality that thrives on deeply rooted respect, the vision that forthrightly faces ignorance and sophistry, and the diligence of inquiry that flowers into insight.

THE SCHOLAR SLAMP

This third-century terra cotta oil lamp from Palestine, complete with authenticating documents, recalls the complex cultural matrix out of which Christianity evolved and symbolizes Drew University's chief reason for existence: the acquisition of knowledge and wisdom and the unfettered exchange of ideas. Whether interpreted secularly or theologically, this symbol highlights the biblical charge to "let your light so shine."

THE FLAGS

The university continues an inaugural tradition today with the presence of the flags of 76 nations, one for each country represented by Drew alumni and alumnae.

The Alma Mater

*Amid the tow'ring forest
Thy halls of learning stand;
Thy name our purpose to uphold,
We'll spread through all the land.*

*Thy colors ever glorious
Still wave on high so true;
All hail to Drew forevermore,
All hail the green and blue.*

*The years so swiftly passing
New heirs to thee will bring.
With loyal, true and honest hearts,
To thee they'll ever sing.
For years they'll dwell within thy halls
Midst scenes we love so well,
And they will learn to love thee too,
And of thy glory tell.*

*And when the shadows lengthen,
And sunset tints the blue,
Then to my mem 'ry comes again,
A thought that's ever new.
Thy colors high before us wave,
A challenge to be true.*

All hail our alma mater fair.

All hail to dear old Drew.
