CHAPTER I

GOD	1
---------------	---

The five-year-old: Does he need an invisible God or the good in human embodiment?—The eight-year-old and the world of beneficent intangibles—Fourth-graders: "God wouldn't be mean"—The twelve-year-old: Is much talking about God important?—What we would like to know: how to improve the familiar patterns—God as good—God as unseen—God's power—God's reality—Interpreting God to children of different ages.

CHAPTER II

PRAYER	15
------------------	----

A three-year-old's resourcefulness—Vain repetitions as viewed at the age of seven—The child who didn't know a good-night prayer—When prayer isn't answered—The nine-year-old who always "said" his prayers—The irreverent child—Fourth-graders who learned to value spoken prayer—The gist of the whole matter—Prayer for the child at different ages.

CHAPTER III

JESUS 29

Jesus as the child's unseen companion—Jesus as magic—Jesus as hero—"Just have Jesus in your heart"—Children "accepting" Christ—"If the world would just follow Jesus' way"—Jesus as revealer of God—What we want most—Jesus' ideals in everyday settings—Parental misuse of Jesus' name—Pictures and books—If you want to keep ahead of your children—Questions about Jesus' miracles—Interpreting Jesus to children of different ages.

CHAPTER IV

DEATH 42

When grandmother has gone: talk of her life instead of her death—A matter-of-fact reaction normal to children—Practical help is what they most need—Grief when a pet dies—The adult's task may be different from what he thinks it is—Billy had it "all figured out"—Trying to explain to the child what has happened—The adult's own philosophy of death—Hope and faith not our only assets—Questions about heaven and hell—Interpreting death to children at different ages.

CHAPTER V

THE BIBLE 55

When children take up the Genesis-Evolution battle—Freddy throws the Bible into the garbage can—Adult taboos—Value of a joint family wrestling—The question of revelation—"Be ye kind . . ." in memory verse and in practice—Wishing the on-coming generation to be familiar with the Bible, what shall we do about it?—And if the Bible is much revered and little read, what about that?—War-time questions about “Thou shalt not kill” and “Love your enemies”—Use of the Bible with and by children at different ages.

CHAPTER VI

THE CHURCH SCHOOL 68

The phenomenon of non-church parents who send their children to Sunday school—Church-member parents compared—Need of active and thoughtful interest—The “usual” church-school program, which appears sometimes in modernized form—But “learning by doing” is not the whole thing—Must we go to the first century to reach the twentieth?—The “newer” type of program and its difficulties—School that is “more together”—Common ground of older and newer programs—The newer education and our inherited values—Church schools, both Sunday and week-day, still mostly of the older type.

CHAPTER VII

THE CHURCH 81

Confusion about place of children in the Protestant church set-up: “Why, I am joined,” Arthur insisted, but he wasn’t—Historical background of this confusion—Children in the main preaching service—A closer connection needed between Sunday school and “church”—Common ways of bridging the gap—And what after “joining”?—How one church attacked the problem—Children's need of personal help—The churches, happily, are still in the making.

CHAPTER VIII

THE HOME 93

The story of Jack, who had no home religion; or did he?—Family worship is impracticable, we say; so what?—Roy's home strengthened him: was it a religious strengthening?—Inarticulate religion—You can do better for your children religiously than your grandparents did for theirs—To the child security is all important, but be sure you know what that means—How about the "rowdy" home?—Should children be helped to see "how the other half lives"?—And when war comes, what?—A closing word about parental confession.

CHAPTER IX

THE COMMUNITY 107

Surprising resourcefulness of children in attacking community problems—Children and local laws: the chairman of the town committee finds himself on the spot—When church and school and home cooperate: the story of Billy—When a church and a social service agency cooperate: spreading out Christmas and Thanksgiving—Reaching out toward the larger community: cranberries can provide the lure.

CHAPTER X

OTHER RELIGIONS AND RACES AND NATIONS 119

Here we have to combat ignorance and the generalizing habit—The story of Alice, who forgot to be scared—The Jewish boy who wrote, "My idea of Christianity is now greatly changed"—When Albert got a new idea about Negro learning capacity—Joe still believed that "by and large more Catholics than Protestants fight"—And there was Eddy—"A day in the life of a Negro"—In war time especially the habit of hasty generalizing has to be, and can be, fought—In fact war time brings a special opportunity.

CHAPTER XI

THE UNDERPRIVILEGED 132

Here again better acquaintance is a basic need—Marjorie and the Valley children—"Who is 'Emma'?"—Life has a dark side—"Just knowing that somebody cared"—Long-distance contacts also may have value: Northern children hear from Jenivee—Our children must be helped to see that underprivileged is not a synonym of shiftless or degenerate—And when they see other children living in tumble-down houses and ask us Why, is our answer fair, informed?

CHAPTER XII

LOOKING AHEAD 143

"He has lost his religion," the adolescent's mother says—"Mother's too religious," the fifteen-year-old says—"A fine religious woman" as a leader wouldn't be so hot, the Girl Scouts think—The adult Sunday is a special object of Raymond's scorn—Iconoclasts, yes, but do we really want them to accept our world?—We do want that they should approximate the "golden mean" in their adulthood; we can help them to do that.
