Dear Russ:

Thank you for your letter of April 23rd. It reached me while I was fighting a stubborn attack of "flu". I'm just getting back to feeling like myself again.

It's always good to hear from you and your personal bits always give me a lift. How I wish I could get back for one of these gala times but it is not possible. I doubt if I ever get worth again but my spirit is with you in your progress.

Do you realize that it's ten years next month since I left Drew? I've begun my last quarter of life's century and my husband is six months into his eightieth² year. We're doing very well, considering but we are less mobile than we used to be and energy is limited. However, we find life as fascinating, as interesting and as challenging as ever.

We could write a book on retirement communities but we won't do it. It's a study in social organization, it's a question about approaches to the need, it's a problem having to do with a waste of potential talent; especially with retirement so early with so many.

Our best to you! We're so proud of what former Drexel students are doing and grateful that so many keep in touch.

As Ever, Mildred Moody Eakin
